With:

Annette Brown, Ph.D., Head of the Washington Office of the International Initiative for Impact Evaluation (3ie) (presenter)

Chris Blattman, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Political Science and International Affairs, Columbia University (discussant)

Sheree Bennett, Research, Evaluation, and Learning Advisor, International Rescue Committee (discussant)

The International Initiative for Impact Evaluation (3ie) together with Innovations for Poverty Action (IPA) and the World Bank formed a joint initiative in 2014, called Evidence for Peacebuilding (E4P), to support the production and use of impact evaluation evidence to improve the effectiveness of interventions designed to build peace. As a result of the first component of the E4P initiative, stocktaking and scoping work, 3ie developed a Peacebuilding Evidence Gap Map and Scoping Paper. Gap Maps are thematic collections of information about impact evaluations and/or systematic reviews that measure the effects of international development policies and programs. The maps present a visual overview of existing and ongoing studies in a sector or sub-sector in terms of the types of programs (or interventions) evaluated and the outcomes measured. The Gap Map was a key input into the Scoping Paper, which provides an assessment of the supply of and demand for evidence on peacebuilding interventions.
